THE AMERICANS
WILL DO
SOMETHING ABOUT IT.

WOW,
THAT'S SERIOUS.
I'M WORRIED...

THE AMERICANS,
THE CHINESE
AND THE RUSSIANS ARE ALL WORKING TOGETHER.

THERE'S AN INTERNATIONAL

Translation Notes

Police station banners, page 47-48

It is not uncommon to see banners and signs like these in front of police stations in Japan. The banners here have messages sponsored by the local Crime Prevention Committee, and say things like, “Don’t forgive violence! Make our city bright!”, “Have the courage to not shoplift and to not let it happen”, “Watch out for bank-transfer scams!”, and something to the effect of “No more car accidents!” Also, in reference to bank-transfer scams, in Japan, one way payments are made is through bank-to-bank transfers and as the name suggests, these are simply scams where people are tricked to make a bank transfer to a fake charity or fake seller of some product.

SAT, page 147

The SAT is short for “Special Assault Team,” the name of the Japanese domestic paramilitary operations force. It is the equivalent of the American SWAT.

Looks like a model?, page 151

In the original Japanese, instead of saying Shishigami looks like a “model,” one of the students says that he’s a “Johnny’s” type. Johnny’s Entertainment is perhaps one of the biggest talent agencies in Japan and is known for many of Japan’s most famous boy bands, male models, and actors. Entertainers belonging to the agency tend to have a certain look and are considered to be beautiful, so Shishigami is considered to have model-like looks.

SDF, page 152

The SDF (Self-Defense Force) is Japan’s limited equivalent of a military. As the Japanese Constitution drawn up in the wake of WWII forbids the country to maintain a standing army, the SDF instead fills the role of national defense, with inclusion in UN peacekeeping efforts abroad in a limited capacity.
